THEY WILL DECIDE THE QUESTION OF ANOTHER P. O. P. PARADE.

Karnival Krewe to Give Its Pageant Next Year at Night-Directors of Both Parades Well Pleased With Their Displays.

A continuation of the Priests of Pallas Association depends entirely on the merchants of Kansas City, or at least upon who are subscribers to the Priests of Pallas fund. This was the determination reached at a meeting of the directory last night called for the purpose of deciding plans for the future. The character of the next entertainment, if it is decided to give another, will also rest with the Twelve of the fifteen directors were pres ent and after transacting such business as remained unsettled from the last parade the matter of future action was taken up and ssed for two hours. While the present directory can do nothing until the subcribers make known their wishes, various plans were gone over in an informal way that in case they should be called on to take action in the future there would a general understanding.

The outcome of the discussion was a determination to let the subscribers settle it and a letter will be addressed to each merchant who has regularly furnished money to the association, asking him to inform the directory whether or not he is in favor of a continuation of the entertainments and if so whether or not he thinks better results would be obtained by changing their character. These letters will be sent out within a few days so that in case a majority of the subscribers are in favor of going on with the work a new directory may be elected and no time lost in preparing, for next year.

The terms of the president and directors expire the first week in November, the new directory being elected by the subscribers. Another meeting will be held next week to receive a report of what action the subscribers desire taken for the future. The outcome of the discussion was a de-

Karnival Parade at Night.

The Karnival Krowe Association will not go out of existence and the splendid entertainment given Thursday will be followed by another next year that will be its equal in every respect. The only changes will be that the parade will take place at night instead of in the daytime and will be of an entirely different character from the one given this year. This was the first year the present directory has had charge of the work, and their complete success has greatly encouraged them, but they feel that to make it a popular success next year. greatly encouraged them, but they feel that to make it a popular success next year, there must be a radical change in the form of entertainment, Plans are already being considered which if carried out will make Carnival week for 1839 a more enjoyable one for visitors than even 1838 was.

John F. Eaton, president of the association, said yesterday that the directory had never considered the question of disbanding and that every one could rest assured that if a parade was given in 1839 it would be on very different lines from that of Thursday and would be a credit to the association.

if would be on very different lines from that of Thursday and would be a credit to the association.

"We will hold a special meeting in a week or ten days," said Mr. Eaton, "and at chat meeting plans for next year will be discussed. At present we are doing nothing but winding up the business of the last parade, and that is plenty of work in itself. I cannot say just what our plans are, for nothing has been formally discussed yet, but if we remain in existence, and I do not know why we should not, we will try and eclipse our present effort. The Flower parade is, of course, an auxiliary of the Karnival Krewe, and its continuance depends on the continued existence of the krewe. If we have one entertainment we will have both."

W. M. Federmann, who is a member of the light committee of the Krewe, stated that while the directory found plenty of hard work to do in getting up a parade it was willing to try it again. "There is one thing I feel certain of, though," said Mr Federmann, "and that is next year there will be but one association in Kansaa City. One of our greatest troubles in securing funds for the parade arose from the fact that merchants were asked to contribute to two associations. A soliciting committee that represented the whole thing would not only get as much money as two committees, but would find it easfeeling that one association is enough and that will be the outcome by the time we are ready to go to work again. This association will decide on the form of enterialment to be given and will make it not only different from former exhibitions, but of a character that will draw the

The directors are ready to go right on with their work and make each year's entertainment a better one than the former. Of course, it depends entirely on what the merchants desire. We act simply as their agents and if they do not care to have an annual entertainment, then it will be dropped, but if it is left to the Karnival Krewe directors, we will most assuredly have another entertainment next year. Only it will be at night, instead of in the daytime. the daytime. We had considered the idea of having

Beekman, acted under the direc-tions of the Karnival Krewe, and as a tions of the Karnival Krewe, and as a distence as soon as the parade was over and all accounts settled up, but at least two of the committee are ready to assist in the work next year and do all they can to make the Flower parade a success. In speaking of the matter Mr. Beekman said: "We are not members of the Karnival Krewe directory and of course I am not in a position to state what the committee intends to do, but for my part I am ready to take hold again and do all I can to make another Flower parade a success."

Dr. Stanley made the same statement and added that his services were at the disposal of the Krewe Association at any time.

PASSING OF THE VISITORS.

All Day Long the Carnival Sightseers Filled the Trains at the Union Depot.

"It has been the best natured crowd I ever saw in my life," said Depot Master Hanthorne yesterday afternoon, "They ere also the most sensible and easiest to handle of any crowd we have had for a long long time. Yes, they have been go-ing home all day, but not in great crowds. They come down in good time, fill the trains and go away. There is little crowdtrains and go away.

all during the week at the depot. It was all during the week at the depot. It was a good idea to give them the eight days' return limit on the excursion tickets. It spread our work out more, permitting us to take better care of the people and let them have a better time. Now in going home they do not have to crowd the trains and are comfortable and happy.

"During the entire week the loss of a single article in the waiting rooms has not been reported to me."

PRAISE FOR THE CARNIVAL. Many People Impressed With the Abolition of Former Objection-

able Features.

"I like the way the Carnival crowds were handled," said a prominent Kansas man at the Union depot yesterday. "Everybody seemed to have as good a time as usual but there was none of that throwing of flour and lampblack and those other unpleasant things winch made it so uncomfortable for we fellows who came in from distance and only brought our baggage in our pocket last year.

"I think you will find that the people who visited Kansas City yesterday from Kansas and Misouri will show their appreciation of the way they were treated on the streets yesterday in future years by coming back and bringing their friends with them. I know of several people who would not come at all this year because of the roughness with which they were handled on the streets during the Ki Ki parade and afterwards, last year. Several of my friends went home on Thursday morning so as not to be here. Kansas City hit the right gait this year and it is appreciated."

"I think it truly marvelous." said Manager Holmes, of the Metropolitan company yesterday, "considering the crowded condition of the street, that so few people were hurt, and I attribute it largely to the increased number and efficiency of the special police. When people will walk upon the track in front of moving trains, no vigilience of the crews can insure them against disaster, but the excellent patrol which the city provided to aid us in watching the crossings and points of greatest congestion kept the more thoughtless of the sight-seers from loss of life or limb in spite of themselves,"

THEY ARE NOW AT PEACE.

Differences Between Tinners' Union and Slaters' Union Amicably Adjusted.

The trouble which was threatened severa weeks ago between the Tinners' union and the newly organized Slaters' union has been amicably adjusted. The delegates to the Building Trades' council from the Slat ers' union have been initiated and the of-ficers of the central body acted as a board difficulty between the two unions.

The trouble arose because a number of roofing tinners agreed to put on several thousand square feet of slate roof after they were notified that the slaters had organized and were attempting to affiliate themselves with the central labor bodies. By the terms of the settlement the tinners are to do the work now under contract but are not to accept any more work that right-fully belongs to the slaters.

Cupid occasionally selects the wrong target for his archery, but his aim is nevertheless unerring. Among his latest victims are John M. Jackson, a signwriter, and Maude Doyle, who by occupation is a milliner. They are fullblood cousins. Jackson's mother is Miss Doyle's mother's sister. They have been "keeping company" for months and on last Monday concluded to get married. Miss Doyle will be 15 years old next May, but when applying for the license she swore she was 18, while Jackson gave his age as 22. The marriage ceremony was performed by Justice Walls without the knowledge of the parents of either of the young people. After he had pronounced them man and wife and given ion's mother is Miss Doyle's mother's either of the young people. After he had pronounced them man and wife and given them his blessing, the bride returned to her home in Graystone Heights, Kansas City, Kas., and Jackson devoted his time to his paintpot and brush.

It was given him and he flew into a passion. The girl says he choked her and kicked her. She tried to pacify him, she says, and was finally driven from her home.

she says, and was finally driven from her home.

She went to her husband and until yesterday afternoon occupied a room in a row of flats on East Thirteenth street between Cherry and Holmes. Yesterday morning Mrs. Doyle returned from a visit to the Omaha exposition, and when told of the marriage of her daughter and nephew immediately proceeded to Justice Krueger's court and had warrants issued for their arrest on the charge of having entered into an illegal marriage. The couple were found an illegal marriage. The couple were found busking in the sunshine of their honeymoon and taken to police headquarters. Jackson was consigned to the holdover and the weeping bride found an asylum with Police Matron Moore.

"They say we are cousins." said Mrs. Jackson, to a reporter for The Journal, "and I have always believed so, but I did not know that when we got married we were doing wrons."

"You swore you were IS years old when you applied for the marriage license, did you not?"

"Yes. I did, They say I am 16, but from that you and Jackson contemplated matrimony?"

"No, they did not, but they knew we were 'keeping company."

Mrs. Jackson then related how she was treated by her father when he learned the truth and, in answer to a question, said that she was not sure that Mrs. Doyle was her mother.

Jackson was interviewed in his cell. He said that he had always been given to understand that he and his wife were cousins. "But I don't believe we are." said he. "She is Mr. Doyle's daughter. I believe, by a former wife. I do not think the present Mrs. Doyle is her mother. According to my way of thinking my wife and I are not cousins nor in any way related. My wife swore that she was 18 years old when we got the license, but I understand they claim she is not yet 16."

The unhappy couple will be given a hearing in Justice Krueger's court this morning.

ies of coal in Northwestern Minnesota, up in the wilderness that is included in the vast territory known as the Rainy Lake country. In the heart of this country, a hundred miles beyond the jumping off place, veins of coal were said to have been found. The reports reached Duluth and St. Paul and investigations were set on foot.

After some time it was learned that the coal had been found by a French halifbreed named Bob Lyons, a man whose skill as a woodsman and ability as a worker of all tenderfeet and sportsmen who came his way was acknowledged in all that country. Lyons was finally induced to pack a sackful of his coal to Duluth for inspection. It was analyzed and reported excellent, as fine as any in the Illinois region, it was stated. President James J. Hill of the Great Northern road wanted to be in quany discovery of such a valuable material as coal, and he immediately made overtures to Lyons, who was sent on to St. Paul, riding via a pass, and in as considerable state as Mr. Hill could force upon him, as Lyons was by nature a retiring gentleman, who, though an Indian, was astute enough to try to keep from his right hand what his left hand was occupied with.

Late in the autumn Lyons convoyed a party of explorers and woodsmen to the lake where his coal was located. He was sharp enough to lead them such a roundabout course that they traveled several hundred miles in reaching the place, and the lake was frozen over when they got there. In the meantime Lyons had bargained for a payment of $500, which Mr. Hill had advanced on the strength of the assays, and had also demanded and received food for his large family for several months. Perhaps the most remarkable thing about this story is not that Mr. Hill was fooled, though that is remarkable enough, but that it was done by an Indian, and that the Indian had perseverance enough to plan the scheme and carry it out to the end, doing the work necessary to make it a success, and so letting out his secret that he was able for two years to hoodwink the most astute business man in the Northwest.

A New York surgeon connected with one of the postgraduate medical schools of that city was one day on the point of lancing a felon for one of the students, a young Southern physician. The patient paled at sight of the knife. "It won't hurt," observed the surgeon, with a sympathetic smile. "I sometimes think," he added. "that it is well for a surgeon to feel the point of the knife at least once in his life. "I saw my first hospital service in this city with Dr. S.." he went on, "and no better surgeon was then to be found in America. He had a large dispensary clinic and rarely a day passed that one or more cases of felon did not appear.

"It won't hurt," was always his comforting assurance to the patient.

"The old doctor was very irritable if a patient made any outery or bother over the lancing of a felon. "Put your finger down there," indicating the edge of the table, 'and keep it still!" he commanded; and truth to tell, patients, as a rule, made little fuss.

The bituminous coal imported from Mexico was valued at $218,496, against $166,813 the previous year. The coal exported to Mexico from the States was valued at $613,715, against $37,482 the year before.

Americans showed their appreciation of Mexican tobacco by importing $297,292 this year. Last year the imports of Mexican tobacco were but $28,025.

"I say, doctor, will you take a look at my finger?"
"The assistant surgeon looked, and remarked, gravely. That ought to have been lanced before now."
"Possibly-but- said Dr. S.; and then, with a long breath, 'Perhaps you'd better lance it now.'
"'Certainly.' said the assistant surgeon. "Certainly.' said the assistant surgeon.

"Dr. S. compiled, and, with a face as white as paper, watched the knife. 'Be gentle.' he cautioned, 'that's an awful sore finger!

"There was a howl of agony from Dr. S., and with his finger in his other hand he danced about the room crying, 'Oh! oh! It was by a devious path, some steps of which were painful, that Verdi became a musician. When he was 7 years old his mild and somewhat melancholy temperament attracted the attention of the parish priest, and he received the appointment of acolyte at the village church of Le Roncole. One day a priest was celebrating mass, with Verdi as his assistant, when the boy became so carried away by the music that his duties were entirely forgotten. "Water!" whispered the priest, but Verdi did not respond. Then, thinking his request had not been heard, the celebrant repeated, "Water!"

Still there was no reply, and turning round the priest found the server gazing in wonder and delight at the organ.

"Water!" demanded the priest, for the third time, accompanying the order with such a well-directed movement of the foot that the little Verdi was pitched headiong down the altar steps. In falling he struck his head, and was carried to the vestry quite unconscious.

But it was several years after this that his vocation was temporarily decided for him, though fate afterwards stepped in and undid the decision.

"Why do you want to be a musician?" asked his confessor. You have a gift for Latin, and must be a priest."

Meanwhile, the lad became an office boy in Barezzi's wholesale grocery store, and for a little over $7 a year played the organ in the church at Roncole; but one day it happened that Father Seletti, who had decided that the boy should be a monk was officiating at mass while Verdi played the organ. The priest was struck with the unusual beauty of the music, and at the close of the service expressed a desire to see the organist. Verdi appeared, and the priest recognized him as the pupil whom he had sought to turn from music to theology.

"Whose music were you playing?" asked Seletti. "It was beautiful."

Verdi said shyly, that he had brought no music with him that day, and had been improvising.

"So I played as I felt," said he.

"Ah!" exclaimed Seletti, "I advised you wrongly. You must be no priest, but a musician."

"Where is Makar?" stepmother asks. "Call him in."

Makar does not appear and the order is repeated. He enters at last, pale, with a distorted fare, ashamed, his eyes cast down. Father looks into his plate, while stepmother, seeing that no one has touched the soup, tries to encourage us.

"Don't you find, children," she says, "that soup is delicious?"

Tears suffocate me, and immediately after dinner is over I run out, catch Makar in a dark passage, and try to kiss his hand; but he tears it away, and says, either as a reproach or as a question, "Let me alone; and you, too, when you are grown up, will be just the same?"

Yet father was not the worst of landowners. On the contrary, the servants and the peasants considered him to be one of the best. What we saw in our house was going on everywhere, often in much more cruel forms. The flogging of the serfs was a regular part of the duties of the police.
